“Yeah No, For Sure!” is a series of cinematic comedy shorts and sketches that pushes your most familiar real-life scenarios to the twistedly absurd. The television world seems to be lacking true comedy shows, and this show would be the perfect solution.

The show will have 6 x 22-minute episodes per season.

“Yeah No, For Sure!” is a sketch comedy show taking place in various commonplace settings and scenarios, such as the workplace, family gatherings, sports arenas, and shopping centres.

Some examples of sketch ideas include:

“Boardroom Starting Lineup”

Board meeting held in your average corporate office, but as each member enters, they are introduced with typical NBA fanfare—lighting, pyro, handshakes, and announcements.

“Men’s Lingerie Store”

Parody of women’s lingerie store, where instead men are the primary clientele, with typical shopping experiences such as first-time purchasing with a parent, women shopping for their boyfriends, a persistent employee sizing man for proper fitting underwear.

“Couple Dance Battle”

A reclusive couple wants to get back in touch with their fun-side, so they decide to go out to a dance club, and as they start to loosen up, their competitive edge comes out, evolving into an intense dance battle.

“Inst-AA Boyfriends”

Support group for the partners of social media influencers, lamenting over the “challenges” of their everyday life plagued by constant content creation, such as choosing the best of a thousand bikini shots, caption generating, hashtag optimization, impersonating my girlfriend in the comments when she’s too busy to engage.

“Millennial Retirement Home”

A glimpse into the retirement community of the future, where millennial octogenarians are playing video games like Just Dance, singing “My Humps” on the karaoke machine, tweeting about their medical emergencies “broke my hip again lol,” and jazzercising to Soulja Boi.
